MOKENA ZONING COMMISSION MAKES PLANS

The Mokena Zoning Commission met Wednesday night to consider tentative plans for zoning certain sections of the village for business, industrial and residential districts.

Quite a number of interested parties attended the meeting. A map was presented by Mr. Cather of the firm of Kelker De Leuw of Chicago, the village engineers. This map showed the various sections of the village to be zoned for the various districts.

One of the most important matters under discussion was the zoning of Wolf Road for business purposes all the way thru the corporate limits of the village. The map did not show this, but only a portion of Wolf Road was indicated to be zoned for business.

Charles Thompson of Hazelcrest, who owns quite a number of lots along Wolf Road was present and addressed the zoning commission showing the absolute necessity of zoning Wolf Road for business purposes all the way thru the village limits, declaring that Wolf Road is going to be the main artery thru Mokena within the next few years. It is paved now in Cook County and will be paved under the Will County bond issue from the county line to the Lincoln Highway, passing thru the village to that highway.

Mr. Thompson made it very plain that if Wolf Road is not zoned entirely for business purposes thru the north end of the village limits, the zoning commission will be making serious mistake. Mr. Thompson pointed out that only the property in the east side of Wolf Road in the McIntosh subdivision is in the corporation limits of the village and that in course of time the farm land on the west side of Wolf Road will be sold for subdivision purposes in which event there would be nothing to prevent the location of business places in that section and as they would not be in the village limits they could operate to the disadvantage of the rest of the business men of the village as they would not be obliged to pay any village taxes, special taxes and assessments which would also mean a loss of revenue to the village and would be a very unfair proposition. On the other side if the east side of Wolf Road is to be zoned for residential purposes only it would mean that if a man erected an expensive home some other fellow on the other side of the street could put up an oil station or dance hall which would have a tendency to decrease the residential property values on the east side of Wolf Road in the village limits, according to Mr. Thompson.

While the News-Bulletin is heartily in favor of a zoning ordinance for Mokena, it cannot help but feel impressed with the very logical view as presented by Mr. Thompson and feels that the future development of Mokena does not lie along Front street, but will come along Wolf Road when it is paved all the way.

The News-Bulletin does feel that if the zoning commission should refuse to zone Wolf Road for business purposes all the way thru the village limits, that the commission is not looking toward the future interests of the community and on that particular ground would consider the zoning ordinance as faulty and in such case would feel obliged to advocate its defeat at the public hearing to be held in the near future.

When a certain member of the commission was questioned as to whether or not the zoning commission would advocate the business zoning of Wolf Road, he replied he was not making any statements as that was up to the spokesman but would not say who was meant by "the spokesman." He further declared that even the Wolf Road is zoned for business it would not benefit the present generation, also that our forefathers did not do any thing for us. Why live in the days of the past? Sure our forefathers did not have gymnasiums in schools nor libraries, furnace heat, running water and a multitude of other conveniences of today, but is that a reason why future generations should be denied these conveniences and privileges just because we did not have them in our day? Where would great cities like Chicago be if its founders had not looked ahead to the future and would have only looked for the immediate benefits to be derived by their generation in their day? Let us think all of these things over and work for the future as well as the present good of our town.

J. W. JACKSON OF MOKENA PASSES ON

J. W. Jackson, aged 80 years, passed away at his home in Mokena Saturday night at 7:45 o'clock. He had enjoyed a vigorous life until a few months ago when he found it necessary to be confined pretty largely to his home. During the last months he had gradually weakened to the very end he was often up and busy about his home.

James William Jackson was born July 23, 1848 in Orland township. He was converted and received a large Christian experience while yet in his early teens and united with the Baptist church at the age of 22 years. His experience was a growing one and he often talked of his ever enlarging love of God. He was a faithful church worker during the many years of his activity and never ceased to be interested in every detail of church life in both his local community and in the world at large. Until the end he was a faithful reader of certain church papers which caused him to be well informed in the progress of Christianity throughout the world.

Mr. Jackson was reared on a farm near Orland. In his early youth he showed particular interest in the intellectual life and trained himself for a teacher. He spent sometime at the State Normal in order that he might be well qualified in those early days. He taught in several different schools throughout this section of the state, a part of the time being spent at Englewood. Mr. Jackson was a pioneer in what we today call "modern" educational methods and is known by many former students as such; his praise has been sung by many for his capable work. Often he has told his friends of the struggle for advancement which he and others with vision undertook in the educational system. He was among the first advocates of athletics in the school life and maintained until death that the underlying principle of character building was in keeping school students busy with things which they needed for their physical, mental and social development and that play was important in this procedure when rightly directed.

For some years after his retirement from active teaching, Mr. Jackson made his home on the farm and about twelve years ago moved to Mokena to spend his last years. During these years of homelife in Mokena, Mr. Jackson has been anything but idle. He has been most active both physically and mentally. His knowledge of world, national and local events has been extraordinary even to the last. Until the last few months he had been an eager church attendant, an interested listener to all lectures and educational features of the community life. He has been a familiar figure, and will be missed greatly.

The deceased was married to Miss Mary Myrick of Orland on December 8th, 1897. Their home-life has been one sweet to behold and a blessing to many.

The deceased had three sisters, the late Mrs. Lucy Sisson of Englewood, Flora and Mary Jackson of Morgan Park. Besides these surviving sisters and Mrs. Jackson there are of the close relation two nieces, Mrs. Carrie Barker of Chicago and Mrs. Edna Fredrickson of Charles City, Iowa.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon from the late home to the Mokena M. E. church Rev. Glen T. Beatty and Rev. Harold Sandall officiating. Burial was made in the Brooks cemetery in Homer township.

This Magistrate Tries To Keep 'Em Out of Court

Sherman S. Knox, who is seeking re-election to the office of police magistrate of Orland Park, has received the endorsement of the Cook County Automobile Club and of the legal talent of Cook County for the manner in which he has handled court cases.

Mr. Knox says his aim is not to see how many cases he can drag into court, but how many cases he can keep out of court. Wherever possible he gets the dissenting parties to agree without a court trial. In this manner many cases are settled peaceably. He finds that it is an easy matter for some people to ask for the issuance of a warrant, but they find it is not so easy to recall.

Legality Of Orland Ballot Is Upheld

The Orland Park village election next Tuesday promises to be a red hot affair with six tickets in the field. A meeting was held by the village board at the village hall on Monday night and was so largely attended that the hall was packed.

After the sample ballots had been printed last week, a question was at once raised by some people as to the legality of the ballot on account of the arrangement of the tickets on the ballot. Philip E. Steffen, village clerk, before preparing the ballot, had consulted attorney A. Krusemark and made up the ballot according to the attorney's advice. The ballot question came up at this meeting and attorney Krusemark who was present declared the village clerk was right in the way he had prepared the ballot. This settled the ballot question.

In the absence of Mayor Schussler, E. H. Cooper served as mayor pro-tem. The village board appointed the following on the election board: Judges, Mrs. Jessie Creer, Ray Heald, Louis Raschke; clerks, Hattie Austin, Rev. Paul Sanders.

Ted Rust handed in his resignation as policeman and water pumper which was accepted by the board.

George Yunker who recently had resigned as village trustee, claimed his seat in the council Monday night and asked that his resignation be withdrawn. He is a candidate for mayor on the People's Ticket. If elected or if defeated his term of office as trustee will end after next Tuesday as a candidate is to be elected to fill his one year term.

Mrs. Davidson who had been a candidate for village trustee on the Woman's Ticket, has withdrawn from the race.

Tuesday will see great activity in the village as all the candidates in the race will get out every voter in the village to vote.

TO ANNEX NEW ELMORE SUBDN

At a special meeting held Tuesday evening in the village hall in Tinley Park, Mr. Elmore who is laying out two subdivisions at Tinley, expressed a desire to have half of the Fulton farm north of Tinley which he recently purchased, annexed into the incorporate limits of Tinley Park and the matter of perfecting this annexation is under way. The annexation of this new territory will greatly increase the incorporated area of Tinley Park and will also provide city water, etc., to the new territory.

TAX PAYERS SCORE VICTORY IN BOND FIGHT

The tax payers of Will County who filed an injunction suit some time ago against the county board to stop the sale of the bonds of the $1,000,000 road bond issue of the county to a Chicago bonding house, won a decided victory this week, when the bonding house entered into a new agreement with the county bond issue committee whereby the county will save many thousands of dollars as against the first agreement made between the committee and the bonding house last August although the county bond issue was not voted on until in November.

Status of Will County's $1,750,000 road building program was settled at a conference in Chicago on Monday morning which was attended by representatives of dissenting tax payers, States Attorney H. Rehn and representatives of the H. C. Speer and Sons, Chicago bonding house.

So successful was the result of this conference that the road building program can begin immediately the suit pending in the appellate court will be dismissed, and lastly the taxpayers are satisfied, since a large sum of money has been saved. The bonding company, the only loser at the conference, also expressed itself satisfied with the bargain.

By the terms of the new contract with H. C. Speer & Sons the county will receive 4 3-4 per cent accrued interest on the undelivered money from December 1, 1928 to July 1, 1929. After the withdrawals are made from time to time for the construction of the roads, the county will receive 4 1-2 per cent on the unpaid balance. This is an increase of 2 1-2 per cent over the original agreement which was entered into by six members of the county board last August.

The original contract, which was called a "bad bargain" and by even harsher terms during a recent suit for injunction in the circuit court, was signed by Fred A. Francis, Frank Lambert, Joseph J. Plese, A. F. Shupp, W. H. Metzger and Chas. Lauth. They made the agreement considerably in advance of the time when the bonds were to be sold. Later their action was approved by the county board.

Judge Frederick A. Hill ruled against the taxpayers on a demurrer when the case was brought into the circuit court on the injunction suit. In a lengthy opinion he stated that he did not believe that the objectors had stated a case since the law has left such matters to the discretion of the board and therefore the court is not justified in interfering.

Attorney Louis Lager, who instituted the suit, immediately appealed the case to the appellate court. This week, however, he stated with his partner, Attorney George Blatt, that the suit in the higher court would be dismissed.

Another feature of the bargain drive with the bonding company is that the county is to receive a premium of $1,250. In the first arrangement the county was to receive a bonus of $68,000. Mr. Lager called this bonus the "boggy man" in the case, since, he said, it stood for a much larger sum of money which the county was going to lose.

Under the present agreement the county will receive within one-fourth of one per cent of the amount of interest which the bonds will cost.

Rid of Constipation. Improved Both Health and Looks

"I suffered from stomach and bowel trouble for a number of years. I finally got so bad that I had no life or energy left, and felt that there was no help for me. I was completely worn out all the time, had a distressed, haggard look on my face. My mind was dull, my eyes blurred, and I was unable to take an interest in anything. I commenced using Milks Emulsion in May. It occurred to me that the best way to let you see the wonderful improvement Milks Emulsion had made in my health and appearance, would be to send you the picture that I happened to have taken a few weeks before I started using your Milks Emulsion, and to have another picture taken now, and send both to you.

"I am still taking your Milks Emulsion and improving each day. I know I would have been in my grave had it not been for your Emulsion. I love to take it. It is so pleasant and agreeable.

"I only weighed 108 pounds when I began to use Milks Emulsion, and now I weigh 138 pounds. It has cleared up my complexion, made my eyes bright and a difference in my looks, as you will see by the two pictures. I don't look like the same woman. To my mind it is Nature's beautifier.

"I try to get everyone that I meet to take Milks Emulsion as it is the most wonderful medicine in the world."

Town Made Invisible

While flying over the town of Bobblington, near Stuttgart, Germany, an aviator was surprised to see the houses and factories disappear before his eyes. It was during a test being made by German air ministry officials and a party of engineers of the new gas invented by Doctor Reddeman, the German gas expert, which enables a city to protect itself against air attacks by rendering it invisible. Ten vessels, containing a secret chemical solution, had been placed about the buildings, and by pressing an electric button Doctor Reddeman ignited the chemical, and clouds of smoke 300 feet high covered an area of 500 square yards. At Cuxhaven a large plant is being constructed to store the chemical to be used in veiling the city in case of war.

Splendid Bell Tower Adorns Florida City

The bell tower recently erected, known as the "Singing Tower," is at Mountain Lake, Fla. It is in the center of the Mountain Lake Club grounds, in the heart of the city. Each day at sunset the carillon in the tower gives a recital and also on Sunday noon. The tower rises 205 feet, the pink of Georgia marble and the tan of Florida coquina stone giving it color. It is the design of Milton B. Medary, Philadelphia architect. The Singing tower has a base 50 feet wide. It is 40 feet wide at the top. The sculpture is the work of Lee Lawrie. Around the base of the tower are carved bands showing the flora and bird life of Florida. From a height of 160 feet to the top the entire tower is of pink marble, all sculptured. The eight great bell windows are decorated in the most gorgeously colored faience. To add a further Old world flavor, an old-fashioned English water moat 15 feet wide surrounds the tower. The tower door is more than 12 feet high and of solid golden bronze.

Driver Should Eat Little

Besides liquor, carelessness and speed, a committee of the Automobile Club of Southern California seeking to disclose the underlying reasons for automobile accidents has concluded that men and women who gorge themselves at meals are contributing to a steadily mounting death toll. Overloaded stomachs, the committee said, cause poor driving. The conclusion was reached after a study of accidents on holidays.

Locomotives are so far from giving up in deference to gasoline motors and oil-burners that in some countries they are adding more cylinders, and Chile, Ecuador and the Argentine have ordered the powerful snake type with boiler set between two articulated engine units.

Church school 10:30 a. m.

Evening Worship 7:00 p. m.

In spite of the rain Sunday the attendance at both services was gratifying. In the Church School the new lesson material for the second quarter was distributed. The new pastor is pleased to find the school using the graded lessons which are the best publications available. It is a privilege for the pupils to be able to enjoy these superior works.

The young people's class are contemplating a series of studies in the Epworth Herald. It is a twenty-four page weekly edited by Dr. Gratz with several associates. It is the understanding of the writer that Dr. Gratz once spoke in our church in recent years. At least the paper is one filled with things of vital interest to youth: Drama, Vocational Guidance, Recreation and Fiction. Feature articles are written by outstanding men interested in the problems of youth and religion.

With the list of those taken into the church Easter Sunday the name of Robert Gilmore should have been included.

The Ladies Aid society met in the home of Mrs. Ona McGovney, Thursday afternoon.

At this time we feel a touch of sorrow because of the death of Mr. Jackson. Our hearts go out to Mrs. Jackson in her bereavement.

It is a pleasure to announce that Leon Tonn will sing at the evening service Sunday. We invite YOU to come and worship with us. The Pastor will speak on the first of a series of topics dealing with Faith. The first discussion will be on "Borrowed Faith". The second on "Earning the right to believe". And the third and last will be, "Invested Faith and its returns".

Getting More Income From Farm Timber

Farm income from timber can be greatly increased by better handling of the present farm woodlots and by planting additional land that is better suited for trees than for other crops. says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The United States is using timber three to five times as fast as its forests are growing it, and lumber prices are gradually rising as a result.

Thousands of acres of small, irregular fields, thin or rocky lands, swamps, and hillsides inclined to wash, should be planted to species of trees adapted to the soil, slope and climate and which have high value for farm or commercial use.

In managing the farm woodlot, trees which are mature, overcrowded, defective or of inferior species should be removed from time to time and sound, straight, young trees given the room.

Trees should be planted in the open spaces. Young trees should be protected from excessive growth of weeds, fire or live stock. Owing to neglect which would not be shown to any other crop, many farm woodlots produce only a third or a half as much timber as they are capable of producing.

An acre fully stocked with trees will grow 250 to 1,000 board feet of timber a year, the Foundation states. Pines grow faster than hardwoods and annual production is greater in latitudes with a long growing season. Posts and railroad ties can be produced in 1 to 30 years, depending on the species, the soil and the climate, and saw timber can be produced in 20 to 40 years.

Besides farm uses, the products of the woodlot can be sold for sawlogs, fence posts, piling, pulpwood, firewood, cooperage bolts, handle bolts and railroad ties. In some sections, nut trees in farm forest plantings furnish another profitable market product. By acting as a windbreak, a farm woodlot will add to the value of the farm.

Proper Feeding Is a Keystone of Profitable Dairy Farming

Good feeding is a keystone of profitable dairy farming, the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation states. But it must be supported by firm foundations, such as good breeding, control of disease, development of other sources of income, and an effective cropping system.

Cows rightly fed give 50 to 100 percent more milk than when their rations are deficient in some way. Differences in the amounts and kinds of feed fed account for about half of the variation in production per cow on different farms. Good rations increase the cost of feed, but increase net income 40 to 80 percent.

Scanty grain rations usually are not really economical. Grain should be fed according to production, about 2½ pounds being given daily for each gallon of milk produced. Moderate grain rations for cows on pasture often increase net returns 5 to 75 percent.

Lack of protein is a prevalent fault of dairy rations, the Foundation continues. It is deficient in most home grown feeds and is costly to buy. Milk contains much protein. The cow can not alter its composition according to the feed received and cuts down production when the protein supplied is inadequate. Giving enough protein often will increase production 20 to 40 percent.

Indians' Peace Pipe

The peace pipe of the North American Indians was a tobacco pipe with a stem of reed or painted wood about two feet and a half long, decorated with feathers, with a large bowl, usually of red soapstone. After a treaty was signed, the Indians filled the calumet, or peace pipe, with the best tobacco, and presented it to the representatives of the party with whom they entered into alliance, the Indians themselves smoking out of it afterward.—Exchange.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

Here is a hearty sandwich to give to the hungry hiker or for a lunch during heavy work.

Sausage and Bean Sandwich.—Rub one cupful of hot baked beans through a sieve and mix with one tablespoonful of tomato catsup. Spread on slices of buttered toast. Arrange thin rounds of nicely cooked sausage on top of the beans and press over another slice of buttered toast. Serve cut diagonally with a slice of tomato on lettuce.

Pears Monarch Style.—Drain halved pears from the can. Arrange two halves on circular pieces of sponge cake, cut-side down. Spread the pears with raspberry jam or jelly, stick thickly with halves of blanched almonds which have been lightly toasted. Boil down the pear sirup, add a drop of almond extract and just before serving pour some of the thickened juice over the pears and around the cake.

Fruit Marmalade.—Pare and slice nine apples, cover with the juice of three lemons. Wash and slice six oranges, shred the lemon rind, add nine cupfuls of sugar and three cupfuls of water. Cook slowly until the boiling point is reached then simmer until the consistency of marmalade. Turn into glasses and seal with paraffin.

Luncheon Delight.—Break four eggs into a buttered baking dish and cook in a hot oven until they begin to turn white around the edge. Then cover the eggs with a rich white sauce, over this one-fourth of a cupful of grated cheese, then cover with buttered crumbs. Brown in a quick oven not to overcook the eggs.

Use the brown rice whenever it can be procured. The wild rice of our lakes where wild fowl feed, is a good food and one which is much better flavor than the polished rice, which is so commonly used.

Peas With Carrots.—Cook peas and young carrots together until tender, season with butter, salt and pepper and serve hot. Another dish is made by adding new onions if small, cooked whole, if large sliced, as well as slicing the carrots. Cook in a bit of water and add a slice of diced and browned salt pork, season well and add a little milk, boil up and serve.

Eat Candy.

The child's craving for sweets is one of the means that nature takes to make certain that he will consume a proper amount of food that is essential for the support of the almost ceaseless activity of his body. Sugar is a highly concentrated source of human energy.

Another reason why candy is particularly valuable as an item of diet, is that in addition to the sugar, it frequently contains fruits, nuts and other ingredients such as chocolate and cocoa, fats and vitamins which are valuable in the body.

No sensible person would overdo the candy habit and allow a child to gorge himself, any more than he should be permitted to overeat on any other single food. Eaten in moderation, however, a piece or two after meals and in the middle of the morning and afternoon will be helpful, and will supply the growing child with many of the elements which are essential to the building of muscles and supplying fuel for energy. All sorts of candies can be bought in the stores, but with sugar as cheap as it is the home-made candies are much more wholesome and less expensive. The following is one that may be prepared at home:

Cream Nut Fudge.—Mix two and one-half cupfuls of fine granulated sugar, and one-half cupful of rich milk and place over the heat. Stir until the liquid begins to boil, then add three tablespoonfuls of butter. Boil to 240 degrees Fahrenheit, or until the candy makes a soft ball when tested in ice water. Stir only when necessary. Add the nuts—one-half cupful—take from the heat, flavor with one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, and set the pan in cold water. As soon as the sirup is cool, beat until thick and smooth. While boiling it is wise to wipe down the sides of the pan with a swab to dissolve the crystals as they may cause the candy to grain if left in it to cool. Almonds, pecans or Brazil nuts are all good with this fudge.

Pineapple Lemonade.—Boil together one pint of water and one cupful of sugar ten minutes. To this add a one-pint can of crushed pineapple and the juice of three lemons. Cool and strain. When serving pour into ice-filled glasses and add one-half a slice of lemon.

FAVOR FLOWER-TRIMMED HATS; JACKET SUITS OF PRINT SILK

FLOWERS on milady's "spring bonnet?" Fashion's answer is in the affirmative, but on one condition—they must not change the silhouette of the hats they trim.

As usual, along comes the exception to the rule, namely, the first hat in this group, whose floral side-trim, as most side-trims do, follows a law unto itself when it comes to a graceful contour. Come what may, go what may, side-trims never conform to rules, their mission is simply to flatter, dattered to the left) is very "Frenchy." The cap with the cunning earflaps below to the left is entirely made of violets—perfectly charming for spring-time wear.

The cloche pictured is one of many versions where flowers are embedded or worked into the very foundation of the hat. These colorful posy-trimmed hats with a brim revel in spring tones and tints.

Jacket suits of print silk are the rage. What with spring at last really ter, flatter, which they always do. Of the half dozen flower treatments in this group, the little draped crochet straw hat at the top to the left is the only one where the flowers are not worked so as to preserve the original outline of the shape itself. Side trims on this order, but formed of white gardenias or white violets are particularly numerous on black felt or straw shapes this season for black and white millinery are exceedingly smart.

An exquisitely dainty patterning of wee velvet flowers imparts springtime charm to the hand-sewed leghorn straw toque in the upper right corner of this group.

Colorful flower turbans and toques have been a hobby with Paris modistes this many a day. They are here, the scene on avenue and boulevard, at country club or in city park is just one print ensemble after another.

The favorite prints for early spring are those with dark backgrounds patterned with tiny motifs. These adopt modish browns or greens, blues or reds for their basic tone. Being dark, they are eminently wearable and practical at this time of the year.

Most of the ensembles are simply styled, like the model in the picture. The silk for this chic costume has a navy background and it is patterned in banana yellow. In every instance, almost, the color scheme of the costume is carried out from head to foot. Wherefore the blouse chosen to accompany the ensemble illustrated is adorable worn with the new fur neckpieces. The foundations on which these turbans are worked are crushable and very light in weight. The flowers used represent a wide range of color combinations. A cap of marguerites in black, cream and gold (see model centered to the right in the picture) is extremely chic. An evening cap made of white silk flowers and fitting very closely (model cenof banana-colored crepe satin. The hat is natural straw color with pipings of navy. Because of its widened brim it is of unusual interest—for it foretells a change from the snug-fitting caps and toques which have so long held sway. Paris is showing unusual enthusiasm this season for the hat with a brim. Not only will wide brims be worn later on with summery attire, but the mode calls for them with spring costumes.

Checked and plaided silks are very smart for the jacket suit. Sometimes the check is in one color for the blouse and another for the skirt, which is very effective. Designers are combining prints in very unusual ways. This interesting interworking of patterns is one of the outstanding features of the modern ensemble. Color arrangements are also unique, such as a red and white print trimming a navy and white print, or a black and white check combined with a red and white check.

More often than not, the blouse is sleeveless. The same is true of the one-piece dress topped with a jacket. JULIA BOTTOMLEY. (© 1929, Western Newspaper Union.)

HOW TO LIVE LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK

STYLE VS. SENSE

WINTER in the northern woods can be extremely bitter and usually is very cold. Therefore, put on warm clothing which is absolutely necessary for those whose daily work is done in these magnificent forests. But because the lumberman dresses himself against the rigors of the Arctic blasts is no excuse for the man or woman who in a temperate latitude dons excessive clothing for the mere reason that the calendar indicates the presence of the winter season.

There are many days when fur coats and other heavy garments would serve better on the peg than on one's back. To realize this fact and to put the idea into practice would be a life-saver for some, a disease-breaker for others and would mean continuous high vitality throughout the year for still another large group.

While there is no desire in any way to lessen the popularity of the coat of fur, one should not put all one's eggs in a single basket on this important question. This practice is perhaps one of the main reasons for many colds, cases of pneumonia and deaths.

An auxiliary coat of lighter weight is required for the forty to sixty degree days. If you own one, watch your thermometer and use it when it registers within those limits. If you do not possess such a garment get it at once, even if you have to pay a dollar down and the rest eventually. Believe it or not, it's lack is a real hazard; its ownership and use, a positive health insurance policy.

For those whose activities are indoors, winter-weight clothing is superfluous. If the temperature of your home or office was maintained at fifty degrees there might be some reason for heavy-weight suits and dresses. But seventy to seventy-five degrees is summer heat. And that is what you likely are living in. So far as the indoor temperature is concerned tight summer clothes would be more logical, wouldn't they?

To conclude, it is not a safe thing to sweat in a fur coat; and it is equally unsafe to perspire in home or office when a freezing temperature awaits you outside.

If you are a woodchopper or outdoors person, heavy everything then. Otherwise, dress for comfort and safety. There will still be plenty of days left, even then, on which to be stylish.

CONCERN FOR LITTLE THINGS

THE other day a congenial mosquito made the personal acquaintance of a lady while she was enjoying the balmy breezes on her porch. The lady soon became itchy, she scratched—and yesterday she died. Also, a few days since, a man scratched his hand on a rusty nail. "A mere touch," said he—and yesterday they buried him, too.

These two stories are indicative of the average attitude toward insect bites and minor injuries. And while they are extreme cases, they nevertheless eloquently demonstrate an important point in the how-to-live-longer plan.

The amount of damage that bacteria can accomplish by way of the cut, bite, scratch or burn depends, of course, upon the virulence of the particular germ in the case. And while a relatively large number of injuries of this character will remain local in their manifestations, there is no use taking any chances on the possibility of more serious trouble. This is especially true since the preventive measures are so accessible, so easily applied and so cheap.

The majority of local infections can be prevented if the initial cause is promptly treated with antiseptics. A safe rule is to disinfect every small flesh wound, insect sting, burn and cut with an approved preparation.

The above suggestion, however, must not be considered as propaganda for self-treatment. Quite the contrary. As a general rule, the local application of a nonirritant germicide will settle the matter. If in spite of precautions infection manifests itself, then "double time" to your physician. Delay may be extremely unsafe. The principle of "great oaks from little acorns grow" applies to the little hurts of the body as well as to trees. General blood poisoning is a disease "oak" and the merest scratch of the skin has been known to cause it.

A word concerning powder burns and punctured wounds. They can cause tetanus. No matter how small the wound, rush to your doctor. And it takes a physician who knows his business to administer the necessary prevention.

Use care therefore in the little things, and thus kill the big ones before they kill you.

Contests on Stilts

Crude and barbaric contests on stilts are those held by the natives of the islands in the southern Pacific. A band of from 15 to 20 young men, with their faces painted in grotesque designs, perch themselves on high stilts and engage in a free-for-all fight, in which they try to trip and knock one another down.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks, Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless, Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

CHAPTER IX—Continued

Our course was to the head of Sewickley creek, which was but a few miles north of the Thicketty run camp. The night's rest had done the girl much good and she did not appear to have any trouble in keeping up with us. I wanted to carry her rifle, and thereby aroused her indignation. Almost all the talk was between Gist and me, although I made several attempts to get some expression from her. She preferred to keep at our heels and hold her tongue. Once, while Gist was climbing a tree to look for smoke from the army's campfires, she asked me:

"Does he know I ain't a man?"

"I forgot to tell him. Think I must have been forgetting the truth myself," I answered.

"Keep on forgetting, and don't tell him," she curtly requested.

"I shall never forget how you stood by me and did a man's share of the fighting," I told her, somehow sensing she was displeased at something I had said, or left unsaid.

"Will the army be at Thicketty run?" she asked.

"No one knows where it'll be," I sorrowfully replied. "It should be well on its way to the head of Turtle creek. It was at the run two days ago, and I'm afraid it isn't far from there now. If it's moved north we'll cut its line of march. Dunbar's provision train will be stretched out over a long distance. If it is still wasting time at the Run we'll shift our course and find it there."

"That man Braddock don't know how to lead an army through this sort of country. He'll get ficked."

"You should be ashamed of saying that," I rebuked. "The army moves slowly, but as it goes by the head of Turtle creek it can kill time till snow flies and yet take the fort. Captain Beaujeu told me at the fort that he could do nothing but run if the creek course was taken."

"Don't go and get mad at me, mister. I ain't used to armies and soldiers. Wonder where that Injun, Round Paw, is just about this time."

"He should be several miles south of us and moving parallel to us. Today is the sixth. It'll all be settled inside of four or five days."

Gist came down from the tree and reported haze or smoke a few miles ahead. He was skeptical about its being smoke as the army ought to be in motion and not in camp. The Dinwold girl abruptly spoke up and declared:

"I feel like we was being followed."

Gist looked at her curiously and asked:

"Do you pretend to hear and see things that Brond and me can't see, nor hear?"

"If I was a woman folks would say I was a witch," she gravely replied, meeting his gaze steadily.

He glanced back through the shadowy woods and assured us:

"I believe the Indians who chased you two have gone back to the fort."

"My feeling is that only one or two men are following us," she qualified.

"Younkers often feel that way when in Indian country," he carelessly remarked.

His indifference irritated her, and she stoutly insisted:

"Some one's chasing us."

"Our danger will be ahead, from the Indians hanging to flanks of the army," I told her. "We may have some trouble in cutting through their line."

She tucked her rifle under her arm and trotted along behind us. She had had her say and was not inclined to talk further. Curiously enough I soon found myself glancing backward, and each time I did so I met her questioning gaze and felt ashamed.

At last I had to admit to myself that her words had put a foolish notion into my head. Of course one might be followed whenever alone in the forest, but as yet there was no evidence that we were being dogged. I fought against the idea, and then told Gist:

"Keep on going. I'll overtake you within the next mile. I'm going to watch our back track for a bit."

He sped on, with the girl running a few rods behind him. I settled down between two trees and condemned myself for giving way to a silly fancy. My view of the forest was limited, but I watched faithfully. A slight noise behind me made me duck and twist my head. Instead of keeping after Gist the Dinwold girl had turned back to share my spying. I nodded to her and resumed searching the low arches that radiated in every direction from our position. She sank down beside me and clasped her hands about her knees and watched my frowning face rather than the woods.

"You think I'm queer, don't you, mister?" she softly asked.

"I believe you're notational," I retorted. "We'll be traveling after Gist."

"Look!" she whispered.

I was in time to catch a suggestion of motion near a walnut. I watched the tree suspiciously, and from the corner of my eye detected a flicker of something off to one side.

"I saw it," murmured the girl, resting an elbow on her knee and making ready for a quick shot.

But she did not see it again, nor did I. Close at hand a low voice called out:

"Ha-hum-weh! My white brother and the witch-woman should be traveling like the deer," and Round Paw the Onondaga stepped from cover and stood beside us.

"The witch-woman's medicine told her some one was following us. We waited," I explained.

"She is arendionunen," he gravely said. "The Wolf runs long and fast from Allaquippa's town to find the army. The bone-breaking man took your talk down the Youghogeny and will follow up Sewickley creek if the ghosts of the Hathawekela buried there do not stop him."

The Hathawekela were the principal division of the Shawnee and claimed to be the "elder brothers" of that nation. I had been in Old Sewickley with the escort, but all the time I was talking she was shaking her head. There was a number of women along with the train, but how many I never could learn as their names were not on the rolls. She would have the company of her sex, yet I was much depressed, and not a little provoked, at her stubbornness. We left her in young Morgan's wagon and went up the line.

The wagon train was alarmed by rifle-fire in the woods; then Cromit appeared, trailing his long rifle. He had been mistaken for a French scout and had barely escaped the bullets of some of our flankers. He was but little worse for his hasty travel and grinned broadly on beholding us, and more broadly when the Onondaga refused to shake hands with him.

"Allaquippa's Injuns are hiding in the woods, scared of the French," he told me. "There's going to be a vastly severe writing before we finish this business."

"We march by the head of Turtle creek. The Indians will refuse to attack. The French can do nothing alone," I informed him.

"There's going to be a mighty tough writing," he insisted. "I've dreamed again of the witch-girl."

"She's back in one of the wagons. She'll put a spell on the French."

He was much interested in my news and prophecies, and by his glances toward the rear I surmised he was wishing himself back beside the girl's wagon. Yet he maintained that to dream of her instead of "t'other one" meant bad luck. He philosophically decided it was an ill omen for him personally and perhaps did not concern the general welfare of the army.

We passed a covered wagon in which Colonel Washington, a very sick man, was travelling. He had overtaken the rear of the army two days before, July fourth. I have no doubt he would have wished to question me, but I knew he must indeed be ill when he could not ride a horse, and thought it best not to make my presence known.

Before we caught up with the staff we learned that some of our rangers had fired on several of our Indian scouts, mistaking them for French Indians, and killed Scaroudy's son. Scaroudy, an Oneida chief, was known among the Delawares as Monactua, but had been called the Half-King by the English since the death of Half-King Scruniyatha in the preceding year.

The slaying of his son was a terrible error as it might have resulted in the complete alienation of our few Indians. But Scaroudy was above the average Indian in intelligence and was as devoted to the colonies as he was hostile to the French.

They had buried the youth with suitable ceremonies the day before we reached the army and had covered his bones with the gift of an elaborate red coat to the bereaved father. Yet the tragedy had a lasting effect on the Indians. Round Paw told me that the Delaware scouts were asking one another:

"If the English shoot us what won't the French do?"

A shadow seemed to hang over the entire length of the slowly moving army. The militia were outspoken in their pessimism because they were not turned loose to fight in the only way they had been accustomed. The regulars were facing their task with grim visages, wondering what chance they could have in this strange wild land when the woodsmen were so downcast.

We reached the staff just as a halt was made for the officers to eat their poor rations. General Braddock sat apart from the others, and we were not allowed to approach him. He appeared to me to be dispirited over the condition and sluggishness of the army, and disgruntled with several of his officers. How much the last conclusion was due to my observation, and how much to the report Cromit had brought me after Beauvais escaped from the road-builders' camp I cannot say. Undoubtedly Cromit's talk influenced my decision, as I saw him there within seventy-two hours of his bloody death.

"You Think I'm Queer, Don't You, Mister?" She Softly Asked.

town on the Allegheny, twelve miles above Duquesne, one of their villages. The Onondaga firmly believed that the ghosts of their ancient dead could, if they so desired, stop the passing of either red or white man.

"The man Cromit will reach the army. The Shawnee ghosts will not stop him. They have not stopped the English, who traveled down the Susquehanna, the Conemaugh, and the Kiskiminetas; and their dead are buried along those streams."

"Ghosts place traps," he uneasily muttered. "They may make a trap for Braddock and his Swannocks."

"What is he talking about, mister?" asked the girl as we followed after Gist.

"Only some nonsense about Shawnee ghosts waylaying Cromit if he goes up Sewickley creek."

"I dreamed last night of a dead English soldier."

"Then keep it to yourself. If our friend knew that, he would accept it as a warning of Braddock's defeat."

Round Paw caught enough of her English to be curious, but I did not interpret it fully and etiquette restrained him from questioning closely. Gist left a plain trail for us to follow but did not hold back for us to overtake him. We did not sight him until within two miles of the army's camp on Thicketty run.

The head of the army was well under way for Rush creek, an eastern branch of Turtle, but a portion of it was still in the camp as shown by the smoke from the many fires. We fell in with a long line of wagons that was laboriously making its way over the road hewn through the forest by the axmen. I talked with a young wagoner, Dan Morgan by name, and he told me that the army had lost twenty-four hours at Thicketty run.

The Dinwold girl was showing weariness, and I found room for her in Morgan's wagon. An escort with several wagons filled with sick soldiers was about to start for Will's creek. I endeavored to persuade her to go back

Majority of Mankind Too Easily Excited

There are clubs and societies for every conceivable purpose under the sun, yet one of the most obvious needs of Americans today is left entirely uncovered. What we need is a don't-get-excited club whose object shall be to keep people from coming to the boiling point when it isn't necessary.

The trouble with most of us is, we get too excited over little things and not excited enough over the big ones.

Agitation, loss of temper and surrender of self-command over the trivial annoyances of life are a sheer waste of time and energy. In most human affairs more can be accomplished through poise and placidity than through effervescence and self-motivation.

If a don't-get-excited club could be so organized as to conserve all the human voltage that now goes to waste through needless excitement it would mean that mankind had reached the suburbs of a new era.—Harry Daniel in Thrift Magazine.

Word Inventors

Shakespeare invented the word "besmirch" and Carlyle "besmutch"; Southey produced "betrayal" and Coleridge "esemplastic"; Goldsmith contributed "cantankerous"; Burke "disorganize," and Bernard Shaw "superman," according to the Oxford English dictionary.

Fruit of the Banyan

The banyan tree is a species of fig and produces a fruit of rich, scarlet color not larger than a cherry, growing in pairs from the axils of the leaves.

HEZEKIAH LEADS HIS PEOPLE BACK TO GOD

LESSON TEXT—II Chronicles 30:1-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord your God is gracious and merciful.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Helping Others to Know God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Helping Others to Know God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Leader With a High Purpose.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Influence of a Good Ruler.

I. Hezekiah Proclaims a Passover (vv. 1-12).

The way for a sinning and divided people to get back to God and be united is around the crucified Lord. The Passover was a memorial of the nation's deliverance through the shedding of the blood of the sacrificial lamb.

1. The invitation was representative of the nation (v. 2). The king took counsel with the princes and the congregation to show that the proclamation was the expression of the nation's desire.

2. The time was unusual (vv. 2-4). There was not sufficient time to sanctify the people, nor to gather them together at the regular time, so they resolved instead of postponing it for a year to hold it on the fourteenth day of the second month. This liberty had been granted before in an emergency (Nunt. 9:6-13).

3. The scope of the invitation (vv. 5-9).

It included all of both nations who would come to keep the Passover to the Lord God of Israel. "Israel" is now used to include both kingdoms. The effort was intended to win back the nation which had seceded. The messengers were authorized to supplement the proclamation with urgent exhortation to restore a united nation. This urgent invitation was tactfully put as follows:

(1) It touched ancestral memories—"Turn again unto the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Israel" (v. 6).

(2) Recalled bitter experience—"Be not like your fathers and brethren, who trespassed against the Lord God, and were given up to desolation, as ye see" (v. 7).

(3) Aroused yearning for captive kinsfolk—"Your brethren and children shall find compassion before their captors" (v. 9).

(4) Stirred instinct of self-preservation—"So that they shall come again unto this land" (v. 9).

(5) Pledged forgiveness (v. 9).

4. Israel's reception of the invitation (vv. 10-12).

This invitation in Israel met with a mingled reception.

(1) Some mocked. The urgent and sincere invitation only excited opposition and ridicule. (2) Some with humble hearts came to Jerusalem.

In Judah, God gave them one heart to accept the summons to unite in the Lord around the great Passover.

II. The Passover Kept (vv. 13-27).

1. Altars removed (vv. 13, 14).

In the time of Ahaz (28:24) these heathen altars were erected in Jerusalem. Before there could be worship of the true God all traces of idolatry must be removed. This voluntary act of the people showed a right spirit.

2. The Passover killed (v. 15).

The zeal of the people was shown in their going forward with the service, though the priests were not ready for their task.

3. The priests and Levites ashamed (vv. 15-20).

The zeal of the people put to shame the priests and Levites, stimulating them to perform their duties according to the law as given by Moses. The Levites then took charge of the killing of the Passover. Though many of the people were ceremonially unprepared to take part in the most sacred service, they were accepted as worshippers through the intercession of Hezekiah. God accepted the purpose of heart rather than the letter of the law.

4. The praise of glad hearts (vv. 21, 22).

They continued seven days with gladness: (1) The Levites and priests sang God's praise daily with loud instruments (v. 21); (2) Hezekiah spoke comforting words to the Levites (v. 22). He commended them and their teaching of the knowledge of God.

(3) They made confession of their sins to God (v. 22).

5. The Passover prolonged seven days (vv. 23-27).

The king's object in prolonging the feast was to make as lasting an impression as possible, so as to result in the thorough conversion of their souls to God.

Just Beyond the Hills

By JOHN SMITH

(Copyright.)

FROM her tiny room in the upper half story of the old farmhouse, Sarah for years had looked out across her father's acres to the hills beyond. "What lies on the other side?" Nobody knew how often or how bitterly Sarah had asked the question.

For Sarah was nearly thirty and no one had ever said to her, "Come, beloved, put your hand in mine and we will go see what lies beyond those hills."

Any hands that Sarah might have clasped belonged to the stolid, grim sons of the soil who lived in the neighborhood and whose one ambition was to wring out of their forbears' land all the living they could. The one of them who had himself known similar yearnings had indeed gone beyond the hills but he had never come back, much less shown any desire to hold any girl's hand—at least, so far as Sarah knew.

However, Sarah at last was going herself. Little by little her chicken and butter money, hoarded for years, had grown into a sum large enough to pay her fare to the city some hundred miles away and to support her for a time until she could find work.

Sarah's hopes were fixed on securing a position with a millinery or dress-making business. She was a skilled needlewoman.

A week—three weeks—a month in the city went by. And she had found nothing.

It was during a moment of despair—yes, and of unconfessed homesickness—that she dropped into a drug store and looked up the name of John Hobarth, who had come to the city two years ago.

When she had found it she acted upon some hidden impulse and called him.

"It's Sarah Brownell," she said, and because she became suddenly amazed at what she had done, she felt impelled to give some reason for her action. "Your friends in Bakerton wanted to be remembered to you, John. I—I have left there for good, too."

She heard John saying politely that he would like to see her, to get news of the hometown folks. How about Thursday evening? Would that be convenient for her?

Perhaps the telephone call brought Sarah good luck. At any rate, the following day she landed a job. Not a very lucrative one, but one with the excellent firm of Fritz & Willard, with opportunity for promotion later on.

It gave her a feeling of assurance. Thursday evening when John came to be able to tell him that she was employed.

Two years had greatly changed John. His eyes carried a tired look that she had not remembered. His shoulders drooped. Yet he told her he was doing very well. A good position, a good salary.

"It's a wonderful thing," cried Sarah with shining eyes, "to have shaken the dust of Bakerton from our feet!"

John looked at her quickly. "You feel that way?" he asked.

"I certainly do!" said Sarah firmly. She made him cocoa on the tiny gas plate and cinnamon toast. He said he would like to come again.

The winter passed quickly. With the advent of spring Sarah began to feel very tired. The confinement indoors and the lack of exercise had taken all her fine color. John, too, looked worn but Sarah long ago had found out why John, for all his position and his salary, was continually worried.

There was a girl. Had been a girl for some time.

Little by little Sarah found out about her. John had thought he loved her in the beginning, taken in by her smart, sophisticated city ways. They had become engaged and presently John had found out that he didn't care for her at all. But the girl—Tessie, her name was—still clung. She was fond of John's spending power.

John asked Sarah's advice and, in the course of conversation, blurted out something which took her completely aback. "I made a mistake when I left the farm. Some can stand the noise and hustle and indoors of city life. But I was meant for the country. I get so I stand at my window and imagine where the hills lie and I wish I could go to the other side."

Sarah was very still for a moment. Then she clasped her hands like a child. "There's your answer, John. Tell Tessie you have decided to go back to farming. Take it for granted she will go, too. Then see what happens!"

She didn't see John for a week. Then he burst in one evening looking as she had never seen him look before. Radiant, shoulders thrown back.

"You're a clever girl, Sarah. Tessie threw me down for the floorwalker like a child drops a thistle!"

Then he grabbed her hands. "I say, Sarah, isn't there any chance you'd go back with me as—as my wife?"

Sarah's eyes widened. Go back? To the country? Then her mouth trembled and her hands remained in his. After all, it didn't matter much which side of the hills you were on—it was whether someone you loved was leading you!

Truculent

"That fellow is very argumentative."

Just so.

"Very pugnacious."

"Yeh, he'd hunt for arbutus with a battle ax."

SAME PRESCRIPTION

HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. It was during the discussion of a new story for a motion picture that Julian Johnson, tossing aside the trashy attempt of some amateur writer, delivered himself of this sage opinion:

HOLD GAS DEMONSTRATION

Tuesday morning the pupils of the Mokena High School witnessed a demonstration test of Red Crown and Ethyl gasoline at the Cooper & Hostert garage. The demonstration was made by two men representing the Standard Oil Co.

The first test made was of the various boiling points of Red Crown gasoline. The next test was the doctor test. In this test the Red Crown gasoline was mixed with a chemical and shaken, then a little sulphur was placed in the bottle and it was again shaken. The result was that the sulphur did not change the color of the gasoline. Another gas was used and it turned yellow. This proved one grade of gasoline was sweet, the other sour.

The third test was the motor test. First it was run on Red Crown gas and it developed quite a knock; then Ethyl was used and the motor ceased to knock and ran faster. A lead solution used gives the gas its red color.

In Memoriam

FISHER WALTER—in loving memory of our husband and father who died three years ago, April 14, 1926

Three years have passed since that sad day,

When one we loved was called away

God took him home, it was His will,

But in our hearts we love him still

In Bond Fight

Under the old agreement the county was to receive only 2 per cent for the money that was costing it 4 3-4 per cent and which was held by the bonding company. Mr. Laggar stated that the county was losing $133,048.25 under that arrangement.

The money under the present agreement will be called for as needed to build the roads. Under the former agreement 30 per cent of the money was to be available the first year, 35 per cent the second and the remaining 35 per cent the third year. The bonding company agreed to take care of all legal expenses.

State's Attorney Rehn said he was not consulted in regard to the original bargain altho he serves as the attorney for the county board. He was the representative of the board at the conference which decided the action Monday morning.

There was no question regarding the interest rate, it was decided at the hearing on the demurrer, since the voters approved a bond issue bearing 4 3-4 per cent interest. The dissenting taxpayers claimed that a Joliet banker would have taken the bonds at 4 1-4 per cent interest.

It is planned to build 53 miles of concrete road with the money. Work on surveying for the roads will begin soon. Fifteen miles of concrete road will be among the first to be built which will include Maple st. to the Will and Cook line.

When Wolf Road, which is also on this bond issue will be built has not been disclosed.
